UNIVERSITY of HOUSTON

Integrative Program in Developmental, Cognitive, and Behavioral Neuroscience

Department of Psychology

The Integrative Program in Developmental, Cognitive, and Behavioral Neuroscience (DCBN) in the Psychology Department at the University of Houston invites applications for the Ph.D. program for the 2018-19 academic term. Deadline for applications is January 15, 2018. See: http://www.uh.edu/class/psychology/dcbn/admissions/

The Program

- 10 faculty members, a diverse yet interactive group, interested in understanding how the brain and behavior change over the lifespan: http://www.uh.edu/class/psychology/dcbn/Faculty/
- 4 areas (Behavioral Neuroscience, Cognitive Neuroscience, Cognitive, Developmental)
- 1 truly interdisciplinary educational experience
- Participate in research funded by various federal agencies and private foundations: http://www.uh.edu/class/psychology/dcbn/research/
- Potential to collaborate with faculty who contribute to physical and mental health research and education across several colleges, departments, and institutions
- Tuition fellowships cover tuition & fees; Research Assistantships & Teaching Fellowship opportunities

The Psychology Department

- New external funding of $7.5 million in 2015-2016 fiscal year
- The Texas Institute for Measurement Evaluation, and Statistics (TIMES), a university-wide research center resource: https://www2.times.uh.edu/
- State-of-the-art animal facilities including an Animal Behavior Core for rodents
- Brand new genetics, imaging, and molecular laboratories
- Human laboratory facilities available for eye-tracking, EEG, neuroimaging

The University of Houston

- Tier 1 (Highest Research Activity; Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement Teaching)
- Recognized as a Hispanic Serving Institution (HSI) by the Department of Education and one of the most ethnically diverse universities in the US
- About 40% of all sponsored research funds are on health-related topics
- Part of the Texas Medical Center, the largest medical complex in the world

The City of Houston

- Fastest growing large city in the US
- Most affordable urban area in which to live
- Multitude of cultural events, arts programs, shopping, and entertainment
- Terrific restaurants of various cuisines
- Two major airports
- Tropical climate with mild winters
- Parks, bike trails, proximity to beaches

For more information, please see: http://www.uh.edu/class/psychology/dcbn/