

July 2017

Dear Colleague,

In recognition of our shared missions to advance integrative science, I would like to offer complimentary membership in the Association for Psychological Science to Vision Sciences Society members who have never belonged to APS. This is a wonderful opportunity to not only introduce you to APS, but also to encourage interdisciplinary collaboration and strengthen connections among scientists globally. The offer comes with absolutely no strings attached, and your free APS membership will be active through December 2018.

Click here to join APS at no cost:
<http://www.joinaps.org/?p=VSS18&s=join>

You may already be aware of APS and our field-leading journals, which frequently report on research related to vision science. As a matter of fact, the most recent Current Directions in Psychological Science is a special issue covering the latest findings on face perception, with articles including “Recognizing Faces” by Andrew Young and Mike Burton, and “Individual Differences in Face Recognition: A Decade of Discovery” by Jeremy Wilmer.

Other valuable member benefits include:

- Personal access to the latest research (including our upcoming new journal, Advances in Methods and Practices in Psychological Science, launching in early-2018) as well as the member-only This Week in Psychological Science (TWiPS), a weekly email of the latest articles published in Psychological Science
- The monthly Observer magazine
- Special registration discounts for the upcoming APS Annual Convention in San Francisco, May 24-27 2018
- Valuable networking connections with more than 30,000 psychological scientists around the world who are engaged in research, education and application
- Affiliation with the most influential global organization dedicated solely to the interests of psychological science across all areas within this diverse field.

I know that you will find great value in belonging to APS, and that APS and VSS members will benefit enormously from the connections made possible by this arrangement. I look forward to serving you as an APS member.

Best,

Sarah Brookhart
APS Executive Director